

Kentucky Commission on Community Volunteerism and Service

Development of the KCCVS

The Kentucky Commission on Community Volunteerism and Service was established by Executive Order in 1994. The KCCVS serves as a conduit for federal funds to support community service and provide leadership for and coordination of volunteer activities throughout the state.

Kentucky's commitment to volunteerism and service is supported and strengthened by the General Assembly, which continues to provide general fund appropriations enabling the Commission and its work to grow and thrive.

The commission has continued to expand its range of programs and services to the Commonwealth through AmeriCorps.

Volunteers and members provide a range of services throughout the commonwealth.

The Cabinet for Health and Family Services is the parent agency for the commission, providing administrative support and oversight.
