Care Circles offer us emotional well-being

Intentional, comprehensive and radical self-care is paramount to our physical, emotional and spiritual wellbeing. I regularly encourage in our virtual meetings and in the resilience workshops I facilitate to build a circle of support. Three to five core colleagues and/or friends that we can rely on to share our concerns/stressors. Supportive, open and honest relationships are essential to nurturing our mental health and wellbeing. The circle helps us carry the burden of our work and life as we struggle with a pandemic, the grief of lost ones, low capacity workforce and the continuous trauma that our clients face and we help to steward.

You most likely already have deep bonds with a few individuals that can easily be recruited to become your Care Circle.

Foster alumni work improves policy

Leadership from the Commissioner’s Office and the Division of Protection and Permanency met with the Voices of the Commonwealth (VOC) foster youth and alumni organization in early October to discuss their current and upcoming work around policy and legislative changes affecting youth in Out of Home Care.

The VOC is working with Aetna Better Health of Kentucky toward expanded access to medical care and history files, working with the cabinet to update foster parent trainings and in the preliminary development of a foster home rating system, and are interested in expanding the Foster Child’s Bill of Rights during the next legislative session, which begins Jan. 4, 2022.

The VOC is an instrumental partner to DCBS as they are a strong, effective voice expressing the needs and desires of kids with lived experience in the state’s custody.

Equity ABC Corner: An Introduction

Welcome to Equity ABCs, a monthly corner in our DCBS newsletter written by me, Dr. Brandy Kelly Pryor, Health Equity Advisor for DCBS and Founder of BKP Strategies.

At BKP we developed a program tool, E is for Equity: Equity ABCs, and I am excited that is a part of the work I get to bring to DCBS.

A few months ago Commissioner Miranda-Straub mentioned the work we would be doing together and one of those items is building relevant language to help normalize our practice of equity and more specifically health equity.

Equity, Social and Economic Justice

What does equity really mean? What is health equity? I can hear your questions and that’s what this corner is about, to break it down, every step of the way. Answers to your questions will be right here but I need your help.

This is how...

Stars aligning for prevention work

Over the past few months, The Vision newsletter has included information about the Thriving Families, Safer Children initiative, the statewide Prevention Collaborative, and additional budget appropriations for prevention work. Although it is still early in our prevention journey, this is a great time for an update on progress and alignment of these efforts.

Implementation of the requirements of the Family First Prevention Services Act was Kentucky’s first significant step on its prevention journey. Kentucky truly was a national leader for prevention in child welfare, being one of only a few states to implement on October 1, 2019.

Even as recently as June of 2021, only 10 other states and Washington DC had an approved Family First Five-Year Prevention Plan. Being an early implementer of the Family First requirements allowed Kentucky to leverage federal Title IV-E funding for prevention for the first time ever. Historically, this funding has only been available for use for out of home care, adoption and training costs.

Now almost two years into implementation, the impact of this additional funding and expansion of prevention services is apparent in the relative savings on out of home care costs and the impact on our out of home care numbers.
